Kader Attia
Sat, Jan 21 to Sun, Apr 16
Block Museum of Art, 40 Arts Circle Dr, Evanston
Contact: Lindsay Bosch, Lindsay.bosch@northwestern.edu, 847-467-4602
Kader Attia grew up moving between Algeria and the suburbs of Paris, and uses this experience of living as a part of two cultures as a starting point to develop a dynamic practice that reflects on cultural differences. He takes a poetic and symbolic approach to exploring the wide-ranging repercussions of Western cultural hegemony and colonialism on non-Western cultures, investigating identity politics of historical and colonial eras, as well as in our modern, globalized world. His debut solo exhibition was held in 1996 in the Democratic Republic of Congo, and since then his artistic career has gained major international recognition with his inclusion in exhibitions such as the 50th Venice Biennale (2003), 8th Lyon Biennial (2005), and solo exhibitions at BALTIC Centre for Contemporary Art, Newcastle, UK (2007), the Institute of Contemporary Art, Boston, MA (2007), Centro de Arte Contemporáneo de Huarte, Spain (2008), Savannah College of Art, Savannah, GA (2008), and the Henry Art Gallery, University of Washington, Seattle, WA (2008). The artist lives and works in Berlin, Germany.

If You Remember, I'll Remember
Sat, Feb 4 – Sun, Jun 18
Block Museum, 40 Arts Circle Dr, Evanston

If You Remember, I'll Remember is an invitation to reflect on the past while contemplating the present through works of art exploring themes of love, mourning, war, relocation, internment, resistance, and civil rights in 19th and 20th century North America. This exhibition includes works by artists Kristine Aono (b. 1960), Shan Goshorn (b. 1957), Samantha Hill (b. 1974), McCallum & Tarry (active 1998-2013), Dario Robleto (b. 1972), and Marie Watt (b. 1967). By engaging with historic documents, photographs, sound recordings, oral histories and objects of material culture drawn from institutional and informal archives, these artists highlight individuals' stories or make connections to their own histories. Some make explicit links to events across time periods, while in others these associations are implicit.

2017 marks two milestones that connect to works in this exhibition. February 19th is the 75th anniversary of Executive Order 9066 which ordered the war-time internment of over 120,000 Japanese-American citizens and residents living on the west coast of the United States. June 12th is the 50th anniversary of the Supreme Court’s decision of the case Loving v. Virginia, which found laws prohibiting interracial marriage—then in effect in sixteen states—unconstitutional. Touchstones for other works include a class photograph of students at Pennsylvania’s Carlisle Indian Industrial School (operational 1879-1918), documents from a Chicago family archive relating to the early history of the 16th Street Baptist Church in Birmingham, Alabama, a photograph of an early 20th century Potlatch off Vancouver Island, and the love letters of soldiers who served in various wars in which the United States was involved. If You Remember, I'll Remember juxtaposes themes and histories that are rarely considered in relationship to each other. Together these works pose questions about the purposes and processes of remembering and the responsibilities of those who remember.

Sat, Feb 4 – Sun, April 2, free
Block Museum, 40 Arts Circle Dr, Evanston

Mining Pictures: Stories from Above and Below Ground looks at ways artists and image makers construct narratives about industry. The exhibition features artworks and documents of mining, and the complex networks of power, technology, family, and labor relations that keep this industry in motion. In bringing these works together, Mining Pictures seeks to illuminate the representational tropes of scientific progress and human sentiment, and expose the constructed quality of the visual stories about industry. The exhibition spotlights the mining photography of Bruce Davidson and W. Eugene Smith, and sets their work in conversation with prints, drawings, and photographs from the late-nineteenth and twentieth centuries.

Gallery Talk: Mining Pictures – Stories from Above and Below Ground
Tues, Mar 7, 4:00 PM, free
Block Museum, 40 Arts Circle Dr, Evanston

Spotlighting the photography of Bruce Davidson and W. Eugene Smith, the exhibition "Mining Pictures" showcases artworks and documents of mining, revealing complex networks of power, technology, family, and labor relations at the heart of this industry, and examining the construction of visual stories told about labor and workers. Join Block Museum curatorial fellow Talia Shabtay, for a closer look at the exhibition and the stories it contains.
Neither Free | Nor by Brittney Leeanne Williams
Thurs, Feb 16 – Tues, Mar 28
Norris University Center, Dittmar Gallery, 1999 Campus Dr, Evanston
In this new series, Brittney Leeanne Williams investigates the black body as a site of suffering, mourning, and memorialization, yet still one that is available to transcendence. In Neither Free | Nor, bodies transition from persecution, through a kind of preservation, to emerge as deliverer or liberator. Williams’ draws from painters such as Fairfield Porter, Alex Katz, and David Hockney, creating an inviting allure often at odds with the scenes depicted. Taking Fairfield Porter’s “The Plane Tree” (1964) as muse, Williams dramatizes the 20th-century landscape painting, repurposing the pastoral scene into memorial ground. The tree leaves, blossoms, and branches become ceremonial objects through their proximity to the black body.

The series also engages narratives of “Whiteness,” frequently situating contrasting images within the same frame as Black subjects, creating a visual tension that exposes the chasm between Black and White communities. As one community feasts, the other grieves. Finally, the work explores the role of black femininity within the iconography of the female form. The images evoke the possibility of salvation as women bow in prayer or weep. Ultimately, Neither Free | Nor addresses the inevitability of physical suffering co-existing with the inescapable hope and possibility of redemption.

Film

In an East Berlin gay bar in 1989, an old man explains his commitment to the communist party’s project of equality after World War II: “We stopped mankind’s exploitation by mankind. Now it does not matter if the person you work with is a Jew or whatever. Except gays. They were forgotten somehow.” Including work from both sides of the Iron Curtain, “The Gay Left” brings multiple perspectives and historical moments into conversation in order to fight against forgetting.

The Raspberry Reich
Fri, Mar 3, 7:00 PM, $6 adults/$4 NU faculty, staff, and students, and other student, and seniors
Block Museum of Art, 40 Arts Circle Dr, Evanston
(Bruce LaBruce, 2004, Germany, digital, 90 minutes)
The Raspberry Reich, directed by the bad boy of Canadian queer independent cinema, hearkens back to the radical politics and terrorist actions of the Red Army Faction, militant communists who turned theory into practice in West Berlin in the 1970s. The film follows a group of present-day militants who think of themselves as the “sixth generation” of the RAF. Their leader, Gudrun, makes her strand of feminism clear early on when she tosses Virginia Woolf’s Mrs. Dalloway into the trash in favor of The Communist Manifesto and Wilhelm Reich’s The Sexual Revolution. She encourages her male comrades to liberate themselves from their heterosexuality and “join the homosexual intifada.” Shot in a deliberately propagandistic style, the film is satirical and sexy. The protagonists fellate shotguns, scandalize their bourgeois neighbors by screwing in the elevator, and eventually kidnap the son of a wealthy industrialist in order to turn him, Patty-Hearst-style, into one of their own.

One Book, One Northwestern

We think we want information when we really want knowledge. The signal is the truth. The noise is what distracts us from the truth.

One Book, One Northwestern is a community-wide reading program hosted by the Office of the President to engage the campus in a common conversation on a carefully chosen, thought-provoking book.

The 2016-17 One Book One Northwestern choice is Nate Silver’s The Signal and the Noise. Silver, the founder and editor-in-chief of FiveThirtyEight.com, will deliver a keynote address at Northwestern on Thurs, October 6, shortly before the 2016 presidential election. It is a natural choice for Northwestern given the school’s investments in interdisciplinary work, data science, and quantitative analysis.

This entertaining, elegant book on statistics and forecasting makes the world of data science accessible and it is a reminder that statistics are only as good as the people who wield them. Silver breezily investigates how predictions are made in a wide range of fields, including chess, baseball, and politics. He offers hopeful examples but weighs the process against a series of predictable catastrophes, such as the September 11 attacks or the earthquake in Fukushima, Japan.

Events related to The Signal and the Noise will occur throughout the academic year.

Now They See It: Visual Communications of the Patterns in Your Data
Tues, Mar 7, 4:00 PM – 5:30 PM
Swift Hall 107, 2029 Sheridan Rd, Evanston
Within a well-designed graph or data visualization, the eyes can be a powerful tool for understanding patterns in data. But within a poorly-designed depiction of the same data, the same tasks can be inefficient, or even overwhelming. This workshop will combine an overview of data visualization techniques with hands-on exercises to illustrate how to clearly present your data to both your research colleagues and to non-technical audiences and will be led by Steve Franconeri, Professor of Psychology and Director of the Cognitive Science Program. Event run by the Cognitive Science Program.

Bias in Big Data: How Information Systems can Perpetuate Inequality
Mon, Mar 27, 4:00 PM
Norris Lake Room, 1999 Campus Dr, Evanston
Moderated by Dr. Michelle Birkett, Director of the ISGMH Research Program in Complex Systems and Health Disparities, this event will present several examples of how social inequalities are present within and perpetuated by data systems.
In any case, as the list suggests, similar things are going on in too many places to be simply parallel domestic stories in different countries. They are linked as responses to globalization as well as failures of national governments, conventional political parties, and economies that seem to offer many people little optimism about the future. Immigrants become scapegoats, but the core feature of globalization that lies behind this is the financialization of everything, the massive conversion of capital into portable financial instruments, and centrally, debt. Forty years ago, only a quarter of the wealth of OECD countries was held in the form of financial assets. By 2008 this had become three quarters. The explosion links consumer debt and vulnerability to corporate takeovers and national accounts. Its bubbles have financed both transformative new technologies and deindustrialization of the West. And its consequences are worked out not only through financial crisis but transformation of domestic politics and international cooperation.

EECS Seminar: New OS and Programming Support for Securing Mobile and IoT Platforms – Long Lu (Stony Brook University)

Wed, Mar 8, 2:00 PM – 3:00 PM
Ford Design Center, ITW Room, 2133 Sheridan Rd, Evanston

Contact: Vincent D. Rivera, Vincent.rivera@northwestern.edu

Software running on mobile and IoT platforms increasingly fall victim to new attacks, which cause device compromises and privacy leaks that are often more severe than their counterparts on conventional computers. My research finds that new attacks on these platforms are possible primarily due to a gap between the evolving security needs of software and the legacy security support provided by operating systems and programming tools.

In this talk, I will first overview my recent works that aim to bridge this gap by rethinking the principles and designs of security mechanisms in operating systems, compilation toolchains, and TEEs (Trusted Execution Environments). I will then present two systems that address a critical yet previously unmet security need of today’s apps, namely in-app isolation. The first system introduces a new type of code execution unit, called shred, and provides a set of associated programming primitives. A shred is a developer-defined, OS-managed segment of a thread execution. Code inside a shred can access, in addition to the regular virtual memory, a private memory region. Therefore, a shred can be used to protect sensitive in-memory code and data against out-of-shred code running in the same process or thread. The second system enables comprehensive security policy enforcement at the sub-app granularities, preventing mutually distrusting app modules from abusing each other’s resources and privileges. In the final part of the talk, I will discuss my ongoing and future works on laying the system foundation for securing IoT platforms.

Almost Human – John Hawks
(Wisconsin-Madison)
Thurs, Mar 9, 6:00 PM, free
Abbott Auditorium, 2200 Campus Dr, Evanston
The Center for Genetic Medicine of Northwestern University Feinberg School of Medicine welcomes you to attend the Silverstein Lecture Series on March 8 (Chicago) and March 9 (Evanston), featuring John Hawks, PhD, Vilas-Borghesi Distinguished Achievement Professor, Department of Anthropology, University of Wisconsin-Madison.

Human evolution was once thought to be a straight march of progress, but both ancient DNA and new fossil discoveries are showing how unexpected populations have contributed to our origins in surprising ways. The recent discovery of a huge trove of fossil bones in the Rising Star cave system of South Africa has identified a new ancestral form of human, Homo naledi, that surprised scientists around the world in many ways. The ongoing research on these ancient creatures has shown that they may have deliberately placed their dead inside a deep, remote chamber, casting new light on the origins of human sociality. Part of the lecture will take people virtually into the cave, and will feature the brave team of “underground astronauts” who worked in this dangerous environment. The lecture will also feature new discoveries made by the scientific team that help to place Homo naledi in an unexpected place in our origins.

Professor John Hawks is an internationally recognized expert on human evolution and genetics and science communicator. He is best known for his work demonstrating the rapid evolution of modern humans within the past 40,000 years; and for exploring the contribution of ancient Neandertals to the ancestry of people living today. He has done fieldwork in Africa, Asia and Europe, and for the last three years has been working in South Africa with Lee Berger on the extraordinary fossil deposits of the Rising Star cave.

The Obama Effect? Reflections on the Experiences of Hawai‘i’s Black Residents – Nitasha Sharma
Mon, Mar 13, 7:00 PM – 8:30 PM
Evanston Public Library, 1703 Orrington Ave, Evanston
Contact: Jill Mannor, jill.mannor@northwestern.edu, 847-467-3970
As President Obama’s home state, Hawai‘i has earned global recognition beyond its status as an island paradise. Yet what do Black residents say about their experiences in the islands? This talk speaks to a possible “Obama effect” that has led increasing numbers of African Americans from the U.S. continent to seek refuge in the Pacific, where they find a “respite” from racism. Yet the stories of Hawai‘i-born and raised Black people reveal an underside to more sunny depictions. This talk is part of the Evanston Northwestern Humanities Lecture Series, where Northwestern faculty share and discuss their research with the public in casual evening lectures at the Evanston Public Library.
