Subcommittee Updates

Marketing & Communications Subcommittee

Karla Del Angel: The Marketing and Communications subcommittee presented their progress on sharing stories with the Northwestern community and external media, facilitating the creation of Charla’s video, BOTC website revamping, branding assets, and more. A message from President Shapiro went out to the Northwestern community on January 9 highlighting the Bursar’s Office Takeover Commemoration in his communication about Martin Luther King, Jr. Day. Additionally, the committee worked with the Office of Institutional Diversity and Inclusion (OIDI) to post a Northwestern Now article on February 14 about the upcoming BOTC events and funding availability, a message which was later picked up by over 40 external media outlets.

Charla’s video was finalized and shared on January 19, and was later added to the BOTC website. With this update and others, the website now features an interactive timeline, which was created in collaboration with University Archives—see the new updates. To create a uniform presence for BOTC related events, branding assets were developed to label the events being funded by or in partnership with the Bursar’s Office Takeover Commemoration. These branding tools, along with the new funding request application page, can be found on the Become a Partner section of the BOTC website. As event ideas emerge, please direct people to these webpages to inform them about the available branding and potential funding resources. Finally, the subcommittee plans to launch a social media campaign in May using the tag #NUBursarsTakeover, highlighting events on the dates they took place 50 years ago. Moving forward, the Marketing and Communications subcommittee will continue seeking opportunities to distribute news to the Northwestern community and externally, as well as promote branding assets and incorporate Northwestern University Black Alumni Association (NUBAA) sponsored events on the BOTC website.

Programming Subcommittee

Michele Rogers: The Programming subcommittee gave updates regarding the new funding request application, the amount of funding spent thus far, and who to contact with funding related questions. As of February 22, a total of $5,070 had been allocated to programs via funding requests, out of a total of $13,337 in approved funding. Lee West and Carole Cahill are managing funding requests through the application page, providing initial approvals, and fielding questions about the funding request process. Moving forward, please continue to inform community members of the funding application page and direct any questions to the Programming committee. The buzz is continuing to grow around campus and externally, as people are learning about events for BOTC.

Engagement Subcommittee

Dana Bozeman: The Engagement subcommittee expressed that their action items and plans are highly dependent on the other subcommittees. Joe Holtgreive from the Programming subcommittee reached out to collaborate on the #NUTakeAStand plan surrounding the April 22 event, Activism: Then and Now. The Engagement subcommittee will be taking the lead on this project, and it will be particularly important to express that the meaning of this hashtag is not intended to represent the National Football League players’ movement of kneeling for the national anthem, but rather to encourage community members to dialogue around what is worth fighting or taking a stand for in the present day. Outreach strategies to various groups have been developed and assigned to subcommittee members: faculty, students, alumni, and the external community. Dana will direct communications to the different subgroups. It was noted that engagement at the state-level has been sluggish but is beginning to pick up; locally, Evanston residents have been very helpful in sharing stories of what happened during the Takeover, and seem eager to get involved.

Legacy & Memorial Subcommittee

Ann Bradlow: The Legacy and Memorial subcommittee has decided against soliciting Northwestern community members for proposals, as this was determined to be problematic, and is instead working on an internal proposal, which would involve a series of physical markers placed around campus to signify events and/or prominent locations. As of now, some of the potential locations include the Bursar’s Office, The Black House, and the African American Studies Department. Several subcommittee members are partnering with the Block Museum to create a “living” sculptures exhibit that changes with the times. Additionally, the subcommittee plans to partner with the Sound Studies Program in the School of Communication to create an audio component of the marker series. The goal for this academic year is to have a completed proposal and process for the logistical marker locations and a timeline of their installment.
