Applying for SNAP Benefits

Are you:
- A work-study participant?
- Working at least 20 hours/week?
- Making less than $1,659/month for a household of one person? ($575/month added for each additional person in household)?
- A single parent and full-time student caring for a child under the age of 12?
- Receiving disability benefits or TANF (Temporary Assistance for Needy Families)?

If so, you may qualify for SNAP benefits!

SNAP (Supplemental Nutrition Assistance Program—formerly known as food stamps) is a federal assistance program that offers financial assistance or food. If you qualify, you will receive a monthly food stipend to spend on certain food items.

- Do my parents' income count in my SNAP application?
  No! The only counted income are individuals in your SNAP "household" (individuals living with you that you buy and cook food with).

- Will SNAP affect my financial aid/will financial aid affect SNAP?
  No! Loan and scholarship money for educational expenses aren’t counted as income, and SNAP benefits won’t count towards income on your FAFSA. However, designating yourself as a SNAP recipient on your FAFSA may get you more financial aid.

- If I use these benefits, am I taking them from individuals who might need them more?
  No! SNAP is an entitlement program—meaning there is enough money for any individual who meets qualifications.

- Will everyone know I’m using SNAP benefits at the store?
  No! Benefits are distributed on an EBT (Electronic Benefits Transfer) card that looks just like a debit card. They can even be used in the self-checkout line.
