Alexandra Solomon – School of Education and Social Policy
Loving Bravely: Sex, Gender, and the Future of Romance (McCormick Auditorium, Norris University Center)
Dr. Alexandra H. Solomon is a clinical assistant professor in the Department of Psychology, adjunct faculty in the School of Education and Social Policy, and a licensed clinical psychologist at The Family Institute at Northwestern University. She teaches the popular undergraduate course, “Building Loving and Lasting Relationships: Marriage 101” and is the author of Loving Bravely: 20 Lessons of Self-Discovery to Help You Get the Love You Want. In this talk, Professor Solomon will bridge theory, clinical wisdom, and research to explore the question, “What makes modern love so challenging?” She will offer strategies and insights to help us bring our best and bravest selves to love.

Patti Wolter – Medill School of Journalism
Building Stories in a Twitter-Driven World (Lake Room 203)
Whether in text, podcast, interactive digital forms or documentary, deep journalistic narrative is alive and well. The key to creating the kinds of stories consumers want to read/click/watch/listen to is narrative structure. It is only through the building blocks of a powerful narrative that we can figure out the logical flow of a piece and begin viewing stories differently.
Almost Final 10.12.18

Wendy Pearlman – Weinberg
"We Crossed A Bridge and It Trembled: Voices from Syria" -- Understanding Syria through Syrian Stories (Northwestern Room 202)
In this talk, Prof. Wendy Pearlman will present her book, We Crossed a Bridge and It Trembled: Voices from Syria, an oral history of the Syrian conflict based on interviews that she has conducted with nearly 400 displaced Syrians across the Middle East and Europe since 2012. Using exclusively Syrians’ own words, the book is a mosaic of stories and reflections that seeks to express the human dimension of the Syrian uprising, war, and refugee experience. Her talk will chronicle the origins and evolution of the Syrian conflict through the stories of ordinary people who have lived and been transformed by its unfolding.

Ryan Dohoney – Bienen
Unlocking Creativity and Building Community Through Experimental Music (Regenstein Master Class Room, Ryan Center for the Performing Arts)
In this talk, Prof. Dohoney will survey the recent history of experimental music in the United States. He argues that such practices have the potential to enhance our creativity while also building community among practitioners. He develops this thesis through three lines of inquiry: the expansion of our listening capacities through attention to silence, the use of musical performance to engender intimate interaction, and the awakening of our attention to the beauty of everyday life. Attendees will be invited and encourage to join in the performance of music of John Cage, Pauline Oliveros, Mieko Shiomi, and Ben Patterson.

11:00 am – 12:25 pm  Campus tours every 20 minutes, led by Family Ambassadors (45 minute tours leaving from the front (West) entrance of Norris University Center

*12:00 pm – 1:30 pm  WCAS Scholars Luncheon (Louis Room South) – not in schedule book

1:10 pm – 2:00 pm  Ju’mah (Muslim Friday Prayer) (Parkes Hall, Room 122, 1870 Sheridan Road)

1:30 pm – 2:30 pm  Family Weekend Faculty Lecture Series: Sessions 2 (Various locations)

Claudia Haase – School of Education and Social Policy
All You Need is Love? What Relationship Science Can Tell Us About Couples’ Emotions (McCormick Auditorium, Norris University Center)
What makes or breaks a relationship? This question has long occupied scholars and laypeople alike. Scientific studies show that emotions play a powerful role in intimate relationships. But how can we study couples’ emotions? Which emotional behaviors predict relationship happiness and which predict misery? Why do some spouses blow their top whereas others keep their cool during conflict? And how do couples' emotional lives change as they get older? In this lecture, we will discuss insights from relationship science on the role of couples' emotions, watch short video clips, and learn how to spot a fake smile.
Michael Beltran – McCormick
3D Printing & Additive Manufacturing (RP Lab - Ford Motor Company Engineering Design Center, SB-310)
The Mechanical Engineering 3D Printing & Rapid Prototyping lab houses the most advanced 3D printing and additive manufacturing equipment available at Northwestern University. Michael Beltran, lecturer in Mechanical Engineering and director of the lab, will be giving a short overview of 3D printing and additive manufacturing technology, as well as a live demonstration of the state-of-the-art machines and processes used in prototyping and product development. Visitors will be able to observe various 3D printing processes, and see close up the advanced technology Northwestern has available to its students and researchers. There will also be live demonstrations of reverse-engineering laser scanning, where a physical object will be scanned back into a computer model.

Candy Lee – Medill School of Journalism
Winning with Sports Marketing: Staying Nimble in an Increasingly Connected World (Lake Room 203)
Sports marketing is a course that uses sports as the lens to explain marketing principles and business strategy. The students enter the course with a passion for sports and leave with a foundation for audience-centric, insight-driven, growth-oriented concepts. Sports is a field that brings cultures and talents together and causes allies to exist in real time across many fields. This talk distills examples of sports marketing to determine if sports marketing is different from other types of marketing.

Marco Gallio - Weinberg
How Simple(r) Brains Process Temperature and Pain (Arch Room, Norris University Center)
Marco Gallio’s lab’s long-term goal is to understand how sensory stimuli are used to build an internal representation of the physical world, and how this is in turn processed into our actions and behaviors. Towards this, they study how “painful” and innocuous temperatures are processed in the brain of invertebrates such as the common fruit fly Drosophila and the planarian flatworm Schmidtea. The tiny fruit fly brain performs amazing computational feats (rapidly updating 3D trajectories in flight!), and do this using only 100 thousand neurons, rather than our ~100 billion. Planarian flatworms are among the simplest animals with a centralized brain (with about 10 thousand neurons), and capable of directed behaviors such as hunting and foraging. Using these relatively simple systems is allowing them to discover basic principles of sensory processing and motivated behavior that are widely conserved across animal groups, often informing the way we think about the function of our own brain.

Block Museum of Art

40 Arts Circle Drive

Visit Northwestern’s campus art museum! The Block is a dynamic, imaginative, and innovative teaching and learning resource for Northwestern and its surrounding communities, featuring a global exhibition program that serves as a springboard for thought-provoking discussions relevant to our lives today.

The museum is open Friday from 10am – 8pm, and Saturday and Sunday from 10am – 5pm. Drop by anytime during normal museum hours, or join a guided tour led by Northwestern Student Docents on Sunday at 3pm. This fall the museum presents three extraordinary exhibitions including Up is Down: Mid-Century Experiments in Advertising and Film at the Goldsholl Studio, a look inside a Chicago design firm that changed the face of American advertising. The Block is always free and open to all. www.blockmuseum.northwestern.edu
